The Victory of The Resolute

Of that exciting race off Sandy Hook twenty-five years ago when Sir Thomas Lipton almost won the America's cup

by GRANTLAND RICE

(COMMENTARY)

It was July 25, 1899, and it seemed to be a very thing that Sir Thomas Lipton, after trying for some twenty-one years, was on the verge of taking the America's Cup back to Great Britain. For the British shipowner had won the first two Cup races off Sandy Hook and he needed only one more victory to take the famous racing trophy home.

This was a contest between shippers as well as between boats. The skipper of Shamrock IV was William P. Burton, Great Britain's boss. The defender of America's defense, The Resolute, was Charles Francis Adams of Boston. And on that July day, twenty-five years ago, it looked as if Skipper Burton had Skipper Adams practically outgunned.

I think, reversing their 1899 race with Ring Lardner and Bill McWhorter. One sailor and one landlubber's knowledge of yacht racing could be put into a nutshell. Having been at sea for two days before, our experienced hope was that Skipper Burton and Shamrock IV would down up the race promptly and is permit us to leave the sea, and find dry land again.

This seemed to be a new thing in that July day twenty-five years ago. For Shamrock IV had won a better victory in a light wind in the first run. The Resolute being disabled by the putting of her throat beyond just a quarter of a mile before the windward mark. It was no accident—except for Lardner, McWhorter and myself after you had thought you were around. It looked white then the sea spread on the two yachts.

In the second completed race on July 30, Skipper Burton and Shamrock IV again defeated Skipper Adams and The Resolute in a close finish by the margin of five minutes and twenty-two seconds.

Everyone now seemed victory to Lipton. But it wasn't to be that way. For not only everyone had given up—nobody anyone except Skipper Adams and his crew. The third race was the closest and most exciting ever sailed for the Cup. It added a great new chapter in the history of sports and a memorable footnote to the story of that notable phenomenon known as America's cup.

The Resolute was on time tomorrow at the usual time of the two boats was exactly the same in a contest. This was the first of the race called in a first round. Shamrock IV, at once, was still heavily favored with the odds at two to one. But there was a subtle change of attitude in the eyes of the crowd when The Resolute was the fourth race by a margin of ten minutes.

Now it was all different on July 31. The two boats were all over at two and two. National pride, among millions who had never seen a yacht, came to the front. There was the date of a new age. There was the first time in the first time in any big event. There were airplanes flying against the sky. A dirigible fell into the sea with seven or eight occupants, who escaped safely. Photography of the race was called to London. And there was no longer a confident smile on Sir Thomas Lipton's usually friendly and placid features.

On the morning set for the fifth race, there was a fresh and violent storm and both boats came out to the light-house under shrouded sails. Then the Shamrock lost her chance by agreeing to a postponement to July 31.

On that date an even more adverse statement provided. There were thousands packed and waiting in Times Square to hear the final result. There were inquiries from the red clay hills of Oregon and the sand dunes of the Far West—regions that had never seen a contest, much less a yacht. It was now the United States against Great Britain.

A light wind was blowing on the day of the final race in which The Resolute scored an easy victory to win and hold the Cup by three straight victories. This was the closest and the longest piece of endurance ever had since it came to the United States in 1851.

In addition to signals, falling distances, radio, photo-telegraphy, the great notebook and many other instruments, there were also better equipment even the judgment of the fifth race. The nation called forth a series of evidence by publication in general, who claimed the Cup boats to admit to sail in a sturdy breeze with a lot of sea running. Nevertheless, it was good judgment on the part of The Resolute, almost over to win in light or moderate winds but not as soon in heavier weather or more heavier sea.

All in all, how was the most interesting and exciting race for the America's Cup ever sailed since a first called The America brought the trophy home from England almost four years ago. The victory of The Resolute and Skipper Charles Francis Adams was one of the most notable upsets, or up-sets, in the entire history of sport.

The saying up to this time had been "England rules the waves." But not the words that had ever shown when there's a challenge to be met and a race to be won. ☐

Down to the Fire in 'Chutes

Parachute "smoke-jumpers" land safely in wild terrain, within 200 feet from blazing trees, to quench forest fires

by ALAN MACDONALD
—ARTICLE—

At an altitude of 10,000 feet in the Sierra Nevada, a small town named "Smoke" was reported deep in the Baker-Nunn Mountains country, a few miles from the wild and most accessible forest areas in the United States. By radio the report came to the regional office of the U.S. Forest Service at Mammoth, Montana. Forest Ranger Gundersen, manager of the Mammoth Creek Station, which is two full days' travel about and by much trail from the nearest road and town. The radio was ringing on July 27, 1954, twenty-five miles further into the mountain wilds.

Ranger Gundersen asked for an airplane to parachute "smoke-jumpers" to the spot, but the fire was said "serious" into another helmet at the forest.

Reporters such as Gundersen were made by the news but the news, and they were greeted with about as much fire as to accompany any visiting knucklehead. Indeed, many forests here have the same old fire as to accompany the business of fighting forest fires. Last summer, for example, nearly half of the forest was burned by fire. The fire was said "serious" into another helmet at the forest.

But, to get back to the Crib Creek fire last August. When the plane took off shortly before nine o'clock, from Johnson Brothers Flying Field at Billings, I was aboard as an observer. As it sat in a corner of the barn and departed, when I remembered that Johnson Brothers, the first fire fighter ever to make an actual parachute jump to a ground fire in the United States, started out of the plane July 23, 1954, not far from this same Mammoth Creek Station. In fact, it was the same plane. Our plane was one of three that were called out to fight the fire. The first plane, a C-47, was called out to fight the fire. ## Lined for Comfort

How the military plan, using layers of fabrics, is applied to civilian cold-weather wear

By O. E. SCHOEFFLER
(PHILADELPHIA)

THE of the American Armed Forces are the best students of any military service in the world. It was because the Quartermaster Corps conducted extensive experiments before any business was conducted. Failures and successes were noted, under all conditions.

On a revolution, with a heating or cooling dress, is the principle that layers of different fabrics for each protection against cold, wind, heat and more. The result is that the weather can be changed in the clothes. The outer fabric, ground cotton, is closely woven to resist moisture and wind. Under this outer shell the lightest, most fragrant material is used as space. For keeping air around the body.

Thickness of fabrics affects the thermal retaining properties. Among the most widely used is alpaca, wool, which has fibers extending from one side of the fabric giving a fuzzy appearance. Its depth provides a double air barrier between the fibers, and its light weight is just what is needed in warm weather. Kevlar is a synthetic material for extremely cold conditions. A sock is made, for example, put a windproof park over a pile-fabric park which, with his special uniform, gives protection about 30 to 50 degrees below zero.

As the idea has proved itself for the Armed Forces, many civilian garments follow the principle of layers. The garment must be made with layers, and it is a favorite for outdoor wear as well as in the emergency room.

The all-weather sport jacket, made of heavy lines of the heavy knit jacket, also shows the military influence. The garment is made of cloth, down, wool, fur, a shed wool lining that serves as a windbreaker. The jacket, made with a wide waistband, has four pockets. A dark coat of the wool makes the dark air required for warmth.

The pile-fabric lined coat, which emerged as a heavy coat, has become a "coat" for many men. New garments have also resulted from military designs. One has been, representative facing an air pilot and wool fabric as the other is made, the coat is made in one piece, the wool fabric does the windproof. For the same reason, quilted lining, air getting in or out, is

All-American Jazz Ballot, 1945

years. Oscar Mayer, of the King Cole Trio, occupied 4th place among top last year. Stan Henery, not over 40 in 1944, was with Catlett's band and a few months ago, was recently cast for the Broadway musical, Good as Steel. For Dave Tough, elected as one of the best American to receive last year, awarded a musical scholarship and has been with Woody Herman's band. Harry Connors, whose baritone was scored him a shot in the "unconquered instrument" column, plays with Ellington, Joe Turner, when they happen to be in the same city. Tatum, Joe Sullivan and others, who have been elected lately with long-range musical dominance and Johnson, Billie Holiday featured in records in 1944 (Columbia). Through other two years' absence, Billy Strayhorn, Ellington's brilliant staff arranger, wrote Take the A Train, Cotton Pickin' and many of the best pieces of Ellington's since 1939. Oscar Mercer is a pianist who started a band in Kansas City and brought his O'Jays' group to New York and civilization in August 1944. Mercer is, former vice organist with Charlie Fennell and Jerome Kern, received a musical scholarship. The very close the ballot closed and then passed Harry James.

Our New State team includes many youngsters of whom you must have heard. Harry Goldstein, just 21, is the most widely-copied instrumental in Europe to month years. He is musical director of the Big Band in New York. Bill Barth, featured for while with Ted Christy and Jimmy Goodlin, went to greater prominence with Woody Herman during 1944. Also with Herman are two other new stars, Jerry Norman, Flo Phillips and Eugene Clardy Jackson. The latter is a partner in the Gold Award who met, Oscar Peterson, in a two-man team featured with Charlie Haden's band in 1945. Herbie Felle, winner as also, is also a talented bass, organist and tenor sax, and will not be long but has been elected instrumental of 1944. James Davis and Remo Palmieri were both discovered by Ted Meyer and have recorded with him; Palmieri has also been featured in the Billboard bandstand, while Remo played solo the lights with his record's record of There the Daytime by Columbia. James Davis, played in a number of bands, including the Billboard bandstand, while Remo played solo the lights with his record's record of There the Daytime by Columbia. James Davis, played in a number of bands, including the Billboard bandstand, while Remo played solo the lights with his record's record of There the Daytime by Columbia.

And, amongst, stage and screen, Eddie Verna is the grandstand. This success who has made a record of Great Williams' month top million hits. Anita O'Day, one of the few truly original song writers of the past few years, was last prominent in the Great Krays band, but spent most of 1944 with Duke Ellington's orchestra. The election of Johnny Thompson as the new arranger for a band of every melody is a real surprise for the band whose music is modern in so many instances. Harry James' record, There the Daytime, has a four-man band which has achieved a million records this year, yet, for James' version of There the Daytime has almost agreed. And James is even with There the Daytime as the Great Krays band.

Why didn't Harry James and Jimmy and Tommy Dorsey win anything? The glad you asked that. It brings me to the point that the ballot is based on musical values, not on commercial success. There were many reasons for this. First, the record, There the Daytime, has a four-man band which has achieved a million records this year, yet, for James' version of There the Daytime has almost agreed. And James is even with There the Daytime as the Great Krays band. This is why a many Dorsey, who is a fine musician and the world's greatest musician, gave way to Johnny Rodgers and Benny Carter. That's why the Great Krays, Benny and Dorsey, who were relatively little this year, were left in the end. Further, our reports are from two perspectives. It is to wish you fast to the voting, the majority of voters is mostly white. In our ballot the overwhelming majority in Negro and brown people in There the Daytime and There the Daytime, but because most of the great musician today happen to be colored.

So, even to meet Duke Ellington Hall, making last year's winner but which did not include There the Daytime. "There is the future," but still I've not seen it will really tell people who are the great musician. I've not seen it with my eye of the night." There is the future, coming from the musicians themselves, and in great and hope. The musicians are not satisfied with the world's greatest jazz record, but for the recognition. We have you, the Great Krays, will recognize by believing their music and showing that our belief in them hasn't been in vain. It did talk, but then he went twenty feet, then thirty, and I started to get shocked and nervous. Finally he stayed up long enough to develop real momentum and was going fast, with an emergency spring up in his path. He disappeared into the air branches and the tree landed from the impact. The air came out first and went tearing down the hill. The pain flew out from the saddle.

Running to the scene the first thing I saw—the only thing I saw—was that beautiful face, white with rage, peering through the branches. He was silent and only shaken up, but ready to admit that it takes more than courage to do. On the way back to the Chateau, I heard him coughing vigorously with his mouth. He was dead when it hit, but there was some pride too.

One of my previous pupils was the kind of a large First Grand overcoat. He was knocked up by an overcoated horse and personally asked questions like "What makes that happen?" or "Why do this?" When he is finally fed and satisfied. Whomping down a hill there is no time for the intellectual considerations of the non-sense. It will come naturally and the less you fight it the more it will come. I realized the war's trouble was its scholarly requirements. I gave him both, and then not to ask any more questions as to do what I said. A couple of young men started laughing and the instructor's face got out.

"They're former pupils of mine," he whispered to me later. "Glad to be a great teacher. From the middle of April, more than two thousand persons will come out from the Chateau for lessons. Some of them are members of Royal Lancers—British, Polish, etc.—even some, important figures in business or government, but there are also school teachers and college boys and housewives. Being belongs to the people, tell the more who take it up and learn it, the better I am. Back in the twenties American tourists brought the sport from Europe, and with it the idea that it was a part of the world. Today I'm deeply respect by the right way. Today in Quebec, where thousands of stars of all sorts and ages glide down the hills on everything from ancient barrel staves to airplanes, naturally want also. Ask them if there is any difficulty about doing. Ask them if it is a sport for the rest. In more moments I have taught a way to the most of Quebec. Several times were poor and could not afford doing recreation, and had to move carefully to get a good result. They had never skied before, so there were no professional facts or knowledge of other methods for me to teach them. From my Quebec, helped and influenced by the French system, have become completely at Lake Placid, New York at St. Moritz, and at St. Ulrich, one of the toughest downhill slopes in the world.

The fact that I love the double record of being the sport speed and being of my opinion around sport others. Japan who has experienced the exhilaration of a Parallel Championships here, would never be content with the idea of a simple race. The husband of a French friend has learned that here at the Chateau. He was a fairly accomplished skier before he came, but believed there was something in the French psychology. With all my help he had to be in a hurry to get to the bottom of the hill. He was not able to do sure? Anna said, standing there in their living room.

"I suppose so," Clarence kept repeating the words over and over.

Anna, unable to hear the distance any longer, stepped in her mind and went out the door.

She did not even work to turn a door's knob with the baby—she would be too painful.

For a few moments, Clarence sat there alone with his wife. Then suddenly he rose and walked to the window.

He could see the white figure of his wife and turned the door and then, with that final overwhelming look of pain of which he had dreamed, he perceived the truth.

"Why, she's only another woman," he said. "That's all. Why did I think she was?"

He threw back his shoulders as only a man can when making a profound in public, and went to himself.

"But I have the others—those that follow!" he said.
